Area Forecast Discussion
National Weather Service Las Vegas NV
714 PM PST Tue Dec 19 2017

.SYNOPSIS...Big changes in store over the next couple of days as a strong cold front moves through the region Wednesday and Wednesday night. Strong winds, much cooler temperatures, and a chance of mountain snow and valley rain will be in store across the southern Great Basin and Mojave Desert. Cooler and dry conditions will then persist into the holiday weekend.
&&

.UPDATE...Quick update this evening to tweak Pop/Wx/QPF grids through Thursday afternoon based on the latest trends and guidance. Main changes were increasing Pops across the southern Great Basin and expanding the areal coverage of blowing dust.

.PREV DISCUSSION... /issued at 215 PM PST Tue Dec 19 2017/

.SHORT TERM...through Thursday night.

Water vapor imagery showing a deepening trough off the Pacific Northwest coast this afternoon with mid and high level clouds beginning to move into the far northwest portions of the forecast area. Strong westerly winds will increase in the high elevations of the Sierra overnight with some potential of these winds surfacing into the western areas of the Owens Valley. However, hires models have been consistent in showing these stronger winds remaining at the mid and upper slopes. Strong prefrontal winds will then develop across much of the area by Wednesday afternoon with the strongest winds setting up across San Bernardino, Southern Nevada, and northwest Arizona. Gusts up to 50 mph will be possible in these areas during the afternoon along with some areas of blowing dust. The cold front is forecast to move into the northwest CWA by late morning and then track south and east during the afternoon and eventually reaching southern Nevada in the early evening. Gusty winds are also expected behind the front and the current wind advisories that are in place look good.

This front is rather dynamic and precipitation will likely develop along and just behind the front as it moves through the area. Esmeralda, central Nye, and Lincoln Counties will likely see showers along the front during the afternoon with snow levels rapidly falling behind the front. Light snow accumulations will be possible across those areas, but higher accumulations will be possible across the higher terrain of northern Lincoln County by late afternoon and early evening where 2-4 inches of snow will be possible. Lower elevations of northern and central Lincoln County could receive up to 2 inches of snow. In Clark County, light precipitation is certainly possible along and just behind the front especially in the Spring Mountains where some light snow accumulations are possible. Snow levels behind the front look to lower to around 3000-3500 feet so some of the higher elevations of the Las Vegas Valley could see a few snow flakes with a few drops of rain in the lower portions of the valley. Measurable rain is not expected in the Las Vegas Valley, but a few drops are possible and any trace of rain that does fall at McCarran would end the rain free streak at 97 consecutive days.

Much cooler air along with drier conditions will be seen Thursday as a strong northerly gradient sets up. The wind advisory will remain in place through Thursday afternoon for these winds. However, the strongest winds will likely be ahead and just behind the front. Temperatures will be relatively mild Wednesday, but fall about 10 degrees on Thursday. With lighter winds and clear skies, temperatures could be rather cold across the area Friday morning.

.LONG TERM...Friday through Monday.

High amplitude pattern will continue through the long term, with strong persistent ridge in the Pacific and large trough over the central CONUS. This leaves the area under generally north to northwest flow, with passing shortwaves bringing bouts of breeziness and cooler temps.

The operational ECMWF has come into better agreement with its own ensemble as well as its GFS counterparts, and backed off significantly on the cool down over the holiday weekend. This should not come as too much of a surprise given how much of an outlier the operational run has been the previous few cycles. Temperatures will likely remain cooler than normal, just not as extreme as previously forecasted, so have increased temperatures toward the end of the period.

A pacific trough looks to be on the horizon for next week, as high pressure along the coast rebuilds further offshore. No sense in getting into any details, but expect another shot at gusty winds and some precipitation chances.

.Fire Weather...Due to the very dry Fall, fuels for this time of year are quite dry. Given the strength of the winds, very dry air, and fuel susceptibility, a Red Flag Warning is in affect for the eastern slopes of the southern Sierra and Owens Valley of Inyo
